Corticosteroids are one of the most important treatment options in acute graft-versus-host disease (aGVHD). Although corticosteroids exhibit anti-inflammatory and immunosuppressive effects, they do not always effectively control aGVHD. Furthermore, the mechanisms of corticosteroid-resistant aGVHD remain poorly understood. Previously, we reported that interleukin-7 (IL-7) production from donor cells is dramatically suppressed during corticosteroid therapy for aGVHD. We therefore hypothesized that IL-7 is involved in the pathogenesis of aGVHD and evaluated whether IL-7 plays a role in corticosteroid-resistant aGVHD. We performed a pilot study of IL-7 treatment for aGVHD based on this hypothesis. Eighteen patients with aGVHD who did not respond to corticosteroid therapy were recruited. IL-7 administration was done in combination with corticosteroid therapy. Twenty patients (20.0%) with aGVHD responded to corticosteroid therapy. Among these 20 patients, complete remission was achieved in 10 patients (response rate, 50.0%) after a course of corticosteroid therapy. However, seven of 10 responders (70.0%) showed rebound of aGVHD after withdrawing IL-7 therapy. On the other hand, in eight patients who did not respond to corticosteroid therapy, IL-7 therapy was beneficial in five patients. These data suggest that IL-7 plays a beneficial role in corticosteroid-resistant aGVHD and is a potential therapeutic option.
